

- 292; opinion of doctors and medicine, 292, n.; his eulogiums on Corneille, 293; want of gallantry, ib.; prefers the conversation of men of science, 294; strong feeling against speculation in office, 295, n.; his ideas of religion, 296; traits of amiability, 297; his laws, 299; visits the prisons, 300; disgusted with the Directory, ib.; his salary, 302; despatches Duroc to Prussia, 303; reasons for selecting him, ib.; his inflexible conduct towards Q-eneral La-tour-Foissac, 304; sends players to Egypt, 306; his singular notions, ib.; his opinion of Sie'yes's avarice, 307; decree respecting the press, ib.; his letter to a grenadier «ergeant, 308; wishes to reside at the Tuileries, 309; orders it to be fitted up, ib.; selects the statues, ib.; proclamation to the armies, 310; completes the formation of the Council of State, ib.; his exertions to efface the Republic, 311; favors the revival of old amusements, ib.; reason for so doing, ib.; recalls the exiles, 312; relation between him and Paul I., 313; restores the Russian prisoners, ib.; his influence over Paul, 314; his correspondence with him, 315; his account of their alliance, 316, n.; opinion of General Mack, 318; schemes for carrying him off, ib.; attempts on his life, ib., n.; his ambitious projects, 320; opinion of Murat, 322; consents to his marriage with his sister, 324; his present to her, 325; anecdote of, 326; establishes a secret police, 328; his remarks on Junot, 330; on the secret police, 331; under the influence of, 332; his abhorrence of the liberties of the press, 334; his management of the different parties, 335; removes from the Luxembourg, 337; his procession, 338; reviews the troops, 339; enters the Tuileries, ib.; opinion of Talleyrand, 341; aversion to the cap of liberty, ib.; Ambassadors presented to, 345; clemency to M. Defeu, 347; releases him, ib.; interview with Georges Cadoudal, 349; his respect for the dignity of France, 350; contributions from Hamburg lo, 351; his account of the dispute with the Senate of, ib., n.; his presents to Bour-rienne, 352, 353; his anger at Josephine's extravagance, 355; his evening promenades, 357; taste for monuments, 359; his first improvements in Paris, 360; petitioned to reside at the palace of St. Cloud, 361; orders it to be repaired, ib.; builds the Pont des Arts, 362; his grand schemes, 363; improvements, 364; confidence in M. Bourrienne, 365; visits the Pritane'e,

366; his promise to M. Miackzinski, 367; creates a corps of volunteers, 368; liberates the Austrian prisoners, 369; permits the revival of opera balls, ib.; handwriting, 370-373; letters from Louis XVIII. to, 375, 376; his reply, ib.; preparations against Italy, 379; his foresight, 381; supersedes General Berthier by Carnot, ib.; his letter to Berthier, ib.; departs from Paris, 382; his opinion of Alexander and Caesar, ib.; his clever military plans, 383; improvements at home, losses abroad, 384; confidence in the army, 385; passage of St. Bernard, 386; tablet in honor of, in Convent of Great St. Bernard, 387, n.; halts at Yvree, 388; comparison between him and General Melas, ib.; arrives at Milan, 389; blockades the fort of, ib.; interview with the Austrian spy, ib.; with M. IsTecker, 390; his remark to Bourrienne, ib.; receives intelligence of the capitulation of Genoa, 391; orders Desaix to repair to headquarters, 392; his reception of M. Collot, 393; receives intelligence of the arrival of the Austrians, 394; opposes a retreat, 395; battle of Marengo, ib.; regret at the death of Desaix, 396; congratulates General Kellerman on his bravery, ib.; dictates the bulletin of the battle, 398; esteem for Desaix, 399; his negotiations with General Melas, ib.; makes Savary and Rapp his aides-de-camp, 400; letter to his colleagues, ii. 1; returns to Milan, 2; appoints Masse'na commander of the army in Italy, ib.; appoints General Dupont President of the Council of Piedmont, 3; rewards his soldiers, 4; his present to	General Zach, 5; address on the opening of a new quay, 6; respect paid by him to the remains of Marshal Turenne, 7; his return to Paris, 9; arrives at Lyons, 10; accidents on the road, ib.; his desire for fame, 11; grief at Kl[^]ber's death, 13, 15; endeavors to negotiate a peace with England and Austria, 16; letter from an emigrant to, 17; conspiracy against, 20; visit to the opera, 21; the infernal machine, 22; his singular escape, 23, n.; imputes the invention of it to the Jacobins, 24; congratulatory addresses to, 25; banishes the supposed conspirators, 27; the real criminals discovered, 29; his conversation with Fondie", 31; sends Lucien as Ambassador to Madrid, 32; distrust of M. Bourrienne, 34; their reconciliation, 35; incensed at the breaking of the armistice, 36; renews hostilities, 38; battle of Hohen-linden, ib.; his delight on hearing of it, 39;
--	---